Origins of the Project

The Piano in the Pyrenees project was conceived by renowned pianist Nicolas Horvath and his wife, Marie-Laure Vivalda. Inspired by the beauty and tranquility of the Pyrenees region, they embarked on a mission to share their love of music with the local communities and visitors alike.

Pianos in the Open Air

The project's centerpiece is a series of grand pianos strategically placed in numerous Pyrenean villages and landscapes. These pianos are not confined to concert halls or music studios; instead, they invite passersby to spontaneously play, creating a unique and interactive musical experience.

Musical Encounters

The pianos in the Pyrenees are not mere objects; they serve as catalysts for musical encounters and cultural exchange. Local musicians, professional pianists, and enthusiastic amateurs alike gather around these instruments, sharing their melodies and stories.

Cultural Heritage and Identity

The Piano in the Pyrenees project goes beyond musical entertainment. It fosters a deep connection between music and the region's cultural heritage. Each piano is adorned with artwork inspired by the local traditions and history, creating a harmonious blend of music and visual arts.

Inspiration for Musicians

The breathtaking landscapes of the Pyrenees provide an unparalleled source of inspiration for musicians. The soaring mountains, cascading waterfalls, and tranquil lakes create a symphony of natural beauty that echoes in the compositions that emerge from the pianos.

Enhancing Tourism

The Piano in the Pyrenees project has become a significant cultural attraction, attracting visitors from across the globe. The combination of music, nature, and cultural heritage offers a captivating experience that enriches the tourism industry in the region.

Community Involvement

The project actively involves local communities in its initiatives. Workshops, concerts, and music festivals engage residents of all ages, promoting musical education and fostering a sense of pride in their cultural heritage.

Preserving the Legacy

Recognizing the importance of preserving the Piano in the Pyrenees project, efforts are underway to ensure its longevity. The pianos are regularly maintained, and restoration projects are carried out to guarantee their continued accessibility for generations to come.

The Piano in the Pyrenees is an extraordinary fusion of music, nature, and culture. It invites travelers to embark on an enchanting journey where the melodies of piano music echo through the valleys and mountains, creating lasting memories and a profound appreciation for the beauty of the Pyrenees.

As the sun sets over the majestic peaks, the pianos in the Pyrenees become beacons of light, symbolizing the enduring power of music to bring people together and inspire generations to come.
